

Bullies put on notice

BYE BYE BULLIES: Glendale High captains Sharen Edmonds and Shane Stigg chat to John Coutis.

STUDENTS at Glendale Technology High School are taking the initiative in looking after their own welfare and that of their peers.

Students will be involved in an extension of the school's existing welfare programs, a program to reduce bullying further.

The nature of bullying, how to identify it and how to deal with it will be relayed in lessons, general classroom activity, special guest speakers and drama performances.

The program began with a presentation by motivational speaker John Coutis, who has no legs and suffered bullying at school, but has overcome his physical handicap and the effects of bullying.

"We do not see ourselves as a school with a particular bullying problem," principal June Hingston said.

"However anti-bullying is a very important component of our welfare policy and practice."

Fire stations open doors for fun and advice

FIRE stations across the state will be opening their doors to the public on Saturday.

Macquarie residents to visit the station to meet the fireies, inspect the fire engines and get free advice on fire safety.

of these fires occurred during the cold, wet winter months.
